CATES RETIRES FROM CONTEST

Gov. Rye's Entrance Impels Him to Withdraw From Senatorial Race.

CHANGE IN CONDITIONS

He Steps Down Gracefully Without a Word of Complaint or Criticism.

Gen. Charles T. Cates, Tennessee's former brilliant attorney-general, has withdrawn from the race for United States senator, thus leaving the field to his two competitors, Judge John K. Shields, who is running for re-election, and Gov. Tom C. Rye, the latest entry into the contest.

The entrance of Gov. Rye into the race is the chief reason for Gen. Cates' withdrawal, which, he explains, has changed the conditions and thus impels him to withdraw.

Gen. Cates says distinctly that it is not his purpose to complain about the new situation nor to reflect on or criticize any candidate.

His card in withdrawing is in full as follows:

"Under the provisions of the legalized primary law of 1917 a candidate for any given office is not required to secure a majority of the votes cast in the primary to make him the nominee of his party.

"If there should be three or more candidates for any particular office a mere plurality of one is sufficient to nominate—there being no provision for a run-off to secure a majority.

When the announcement was made of my purpose to become a candidate for the democratic nomination for United States senator in the general primary to be held on the first day of August, there was only one other announced candidate for that office, and if there had been no other candidates than the then announced candidate and myself, your nominee would be, as he should be, chosen by a majority of the democratic votes cast in said election.

"My announcement was made under the belief that there would be only two candidates—the then announced candidate and myself—in the race, and I may be permitted to say that it was my opinion that under such conditions the majority of the democratic voters in Tennessee would approve my candidacy.

"However, since my announcement and since my qualification as a candidate, there is a third candidate springing to that high office, and the changed conditions arising therefore impel me to state candidly to you that I do not deem it advisable to further prosecute my candidacy, or to seek at your hands a commission to go before the voters of Tennessee as your candidate for United States senator under these new and different conditions.

"In taking this action it is my desire to make it plain that it is not my intention to complain about this new situation or to reflect upon or criticize any candidate. It is the right of any Tennessee democrat, any full-blooded American, to aspire to your suffrages without having his patriotism questioned or his motives impugned. In view of sundry statements misrepresenting my position, it is my further desire to state emphatically that my action heretofore stated is not taken in the interest of or to aid any candidate.

I became a candidate as a free man, and as such I retire—obligated to no one save my friends, and to them my obligations are beyond measure.

"To the thousands of loyal democrats who have generously honored me with assurances of their approval and support of my candidacy, I desire in this way to return to them my sincere appreciation of their confidence and to say to them that to have and to merit their esteem and confidence means infinitely more to me than the possession of any office within their gift.

"Let me say that office away from my profession has never been particularly attractive to me—that in announcing my candidacy it was with the hope of giving to our country the best in me during these times when every American should give his best to the uttermost—that I know that the continued practice of my profession will be more comfortable and agreeable to me than carrying the onerous burdens and great responsibilities of the high office to which I aspired—that I am content to retire from the contest, holding myself ready at all times to serve our country in this hour of her peril in humbler ways than that great office; yes, in any way for which I may be fitted, and to do my utmost in any station to uphold the efforts of our great president to insure the safety of people and perpetuity of our democratic institutions—and to save humanity and civilization from being crushed and blotted out by the infer-

Cough Has Gone and Her Chest Is Now Almost Free of Pain.

"I had a dreadful cough and my chest was sore. I was also in a run-down condition and was really not in shape to do my housework with justice to myself," says Mrs. Belle Pope, who lives at 37 Fain street, Nashville, Tenn., in a statement given several days ago.

"It seemed as if nothing in the way of cough syrups would do me the least good and I tried many of them. Finally, a friend advised me to try Lung-Vita. I did and to my surprise the cough left and the soreness in my chest is all gone. I have gained in weight and feel fine. For this reason I think that Lung-Vita is a fine medicine."

JUSTICE WHEELS

STILLED BY WAR

Never Before Have Court Dockets Been in Such a Demoralized Condition.

Never before in the history of the courts of Hamilton county have the court dockets been in such a demoralized condition. The time of the year when litigation in all the courts should be at its height winding up for the September term, there is scarcely any litigation going on, and the criminal court is the only tribunal in session and very little business can be transacted there for the reasons of absent witnesses, absent lawyers and absent clients. The criminal court opened Monday morning and despite there were over forty cases docketed not a single one went to trial. In some instances the attorney had joined the colors, in another the defendant had gone to the front, and in others the witnesses had either gone to war or disappeared.

Chancellor W. B. Garvin stated Tuesday morning that he had cleared up his docket and there were only two cases pending before him and the reason they had not been decided was that the attorneys were late in getting in their transcripts. "Of course," stated the chancellor, "this doesn't mean that there is no litigation in my court pending, but until now it has not come under my jurisdiction through the proper legal channels." "There are a number of cases," continued the chancellor, "on file now in the clerk and master's office, but have not been as yet placed on my motion docket for trial." Monday the chancellor began his ex parte divorce week, and despite there were several cases of this nature on the docket for the reason of absent witnesses only one case was tried.

The circuit court met Monday and after Judge Nathan L. Bachman had heard a few motions he adjourned his court, and for the reason the civil court of appeals is now in session at Knoxville it is thought there will be no further session of the circuit court for the week. Judge Bachman has a number of cases which he is anxious to rid his docket of before he steps down—or rather up—in September. It is thought these cases will be tried as best they can under the demoralized conditions. The grand jury is in session Tuesday, but Assistant Attorney-General T. Pope Shepherd states that the inquisitorial body can transact what little business it has in a few hours. Despite the present grand jury has been empaneled for over two months, it has held only a few sessions, for the reason there was nothing to do.

While the courts are lagging for lack of business it would be thought the various candidates at the courthouse asking re-election would get active. But this is not true, and from the appearance of the courthouse no one would ever think this was election year. The plain solution given by everyone is "the people have their minds on the winning of this war and nothing can distract them."

Sammy Carries 220 Rounds, While Hun Has Only 120

Hun efficiency does not extend to cartridge belts. German belts are made of leather while English and French are woven of cotton. It is gravely stated that the lightness and flexibility of cotton, its imperviousness to atmospheric conditions cause the British soldier to be able to shoot faster, and therefore to be more than the equivalent in fighting power of the individual units.

With the light web belt American soldiers can carry 220 rounds of ammunition, whereas the German carries only 120 rounds, and thirty of these are in his knapsack.

The manufacture of the American web belt is one of the most intricate operations in the textile field. They are finished with a waterproofing and will neither stretch nor shrink. However, it is admitted by military experts that they are not so well adapted to fogging captive slaves to work in fields or lacerating human flesh in orgies of Sadism as the Potsdam leather belt.

LOTTIE, "A REGULAR DOLL," COMES TO GRIEF

Escapes From Crittenton Home and Establishes Quarters on White Oak Hill.

When Lottie Dunne, erstwhile "queen of the streets" and recently escaped from the watchful guards at the Crittenton home, went out for an innocent automobile spin last Saturday night little did she think that it would end up with her being lodged in jail in default of $5,000 bond.

When the military police first took notice of Lottie's not unsullied reputation and also her "queenly" appearance, evidence of her capricious caprices did not present themselves. Neither did they when she was hailed before Judge Fleming and later removed to the county jail. But when she was taken to the Crittenton home about two weeks ago, where her movements were not hampered by bothersome iron bars, she took it into her frowzy head that a get-away would not be out of place. And so she got away, nothing being heard from her until last Friday, when Private Hull, of the military police, began to hear strange stories of a regular "dolly," so characterized by the country folk, that had adopted the summit of White Oak hill, a mile out from North Chattanooga, as her place of abode. And, incidentally, it seems that a man, Glendon Baker, had settled in the same house as Lottie; not living with her, you understand, but merely in the same house, who was wont to pilot the male persons through the wilds of North Chattanooga to Lottie's abode.

But alas, Fred carried one too many soldiers to see her, said act being committed last Saturday night, when Private Hull persuaded the driver that he was "all right," and forthwith the two sallied forth to see Lottie. When Lottie came to the door at their call she was very much delighted at being asked to go on an auto ride. The man living with her was also asked along. When all four were safely started off, the provost guard calmly announced that he was taking them to jail and did so.

All three were fined $50 each for the city and the same amount for the state, Adams being charged with procuring women for immoral purposes and the other two for vagrancy. The two men were held over to the criminal court under $500 bond, but Lottie was not held so lightly, the judge fixing hers at $5,000.

OPPORTUNITY

There's only one thing that hasn't gone up in price in Chattanooga since the war started.

You pay more for sugar, coffee, flour, clothes—everything you eat and wear, but—

You don't pay any more for real estate or a home now than the price in 1914.

Wages are higher, yet you can buy a home at the before-the-war price.

It is the history of years and years that real estate is the last to go up in price, also the last to come down.

So it's to be expected that real estate soon will increase in value in the same way that sugar, flour and the things you wear are already increased.

By buying now, or making a payment down on a home now, you may enjoy the expected rise in value, and make several hundred dollars. Certain it is that real estate will go no lower.

Every man ought to have a home; there never was a better time to buy one than now. Owning a home gives you a different feeling—a feeling that you and your family are welded closer to the community.
